September-October 2015

Seth Kellogg, Marjorie W. Rines, and Robert H. Stymeist

September was exceptionally mild with four days in the 90s and a high of 96° on September 8. Rainfall was almost nonexistent until the very last day of the month, when a torrential storm dropped 2.46 inches of rain in Boston. The total for the month was 3.93 inches, the first month since June with more rainfall than normal.

October was another warm month. There were six days in the 70s, and the high in Boston was 76° on October 12. No killing frost was recorded. The low for the month was 42° degrees on Halloween. Rainfall totaled 1.74 inches, 2.2 inches below average for October.

WATERFOWL THROUGH ALCIDS

On September 10, a fishing boat captain photographed a Masked Booby over West Atlantis Canyon on the edge of the continental shelf about 90 miles south of Nantucket. On October 15, a Masked Booby was seen off Cape May, New Jersey, likely the same bird. Although regularly seen off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina, this bird is exceptionally rare north of there and a first record for Massachusetts. A Brown Booby was seen through the period off outer Cape Cod. It is undoubtedly the same individual seen off and on as long ago as June 20.

A Brown Pelican was seen on Nantucket on September 2, shortly after one was reported off South Beach in Chatham on August 31. Although the observer of the Nantucket bird did not age it, the South Beach bird was an adult, and it is fair to assume it was the same bird. Inland in Southborough an immature Brown Pelican was found dehydrated and malnourished hiding under a tractor-trailer and was taken to the Tufts Wildlife Clinic for rehabilitation.

A Purple Gallinule was discovered at the Westboro Wildlife Management Area on October 21, where it lingered for two days allowing many birders to enjoy it. Common Gallinule has been reported fairly regularly at Great Meadows NWR, but a sighting of two in Westport was interesting for that location. An American Avocet spent two days in Edgartown.

Two adult Sabine's Gulls were seen off Provincetown on September 12, and sightings of a single bird continued through September 20. On September 13, an observer on Tuckernuck Island photographed a Bridled Tern. There were sightings on July 11 and August 19 in this same area, which undoubtedly represented the same individual.

CUCKOOS THROUGH FINCHES

Although Eastern Screech-Owls may be the most abundant owl in Massachusetts, their cryptic habits make them difficult to find. Perhaps the best strategy is to draw them in by imitating them in the dark. Brian Cassie used this strategy to tally 32 Screech-Owls in five days just in the town of Foxboro. The first Snowy Owl of the season was sighted at Sandy Neck in Barnstable on October 25, two more were seen at Logan Airport on October 26, and one was sighted in Wellfleet on the 27th. A Long-eared Owl was a surprise find at Marblehead Neck, and a Short-eared Owl was noted at Rumney Marsh in Revere. This period coincides with the peak movement of Northern Saw-whet Owls. The best conditions for movement occur during a new moon with cold temperatures and a light wind from the north or northeast. Although this season was relatively mild with no big cold front, the banding station at Drumlin Farm did net 104 Saw-whets.

Hummingbirds that show up in October always need special scrutiny as they may be vagrants; this year there were three carefully documented reports of Ruby-throated Hummingbirds. In Great Barrington a Rufous Hummingbird was found on October 11.

Another Selasphorus type hummingbird showed up in Medford on October 12 in the same yard where one was seen on October 17 last year. Hawk watchers on Wachusett Mountain tallied 94 American Kestrels, 25 Merlin, and 31 Peregrines during the month of September. Red-headed Woodpeckers were reported from four locations, including two adults and two juveniles from Longmeadow.

The fall passerine migration should have been well underway during this period, but most birders felt it was lackluster, especially in eastern Massachusetts. It was a bit better in western sections of the state. October did see significant movement in mid-month with good numbers of Blackpolls, Palm, and of course Yellow-rumped warblers. There were some exceptional late records: an Acadian Flycatcher banded at Wellfleet on September 29, a Warbling Vireo on Cuttyhunk on October 10, a Louisiana Waterthrush in Southwick on September 11, a Tennessee Warbler in Chatham on October 30, and a Prairie Warbler in Lexington on October 29. At Manomet, late records included a Gray-cheeked Thrush on October 19 and a Swainson's Thrush on October 27, both banded.

Highlights of sparrow migration included a total of 24 Clay-colored, eight Lark, five Grasshopper, and 11 Nelson's sparrows. Many observers commented on the scarcity of Lincoln's and White-crowned sparrows, both noted in lower numbers this year than last year.

Success stories included a record 370 fledged Purple Martins in Rehoboth, and on Plum Island 35 fledged, two better than in 2014. At Manomet a total of 322 Tufted Titmice were banded during October; Manomet's 47 years of banding data have suggested a northward range shift for several species, one of which is the Tufted Titmouse. This was a banner season for vagrants and less common birds. Nine Western Kingbirds were seen during the period as compared to just two in 2014. Although there were reports of Say's Phoebe from four locations, the two reported on September 7 were undoubtedly the same bird, fortuitously discovered by two different birders on Tuckernuck Island and nearby Esther Island. The bird seen in Chilmark the next day could easily have been the same bird. Bell's Vireo has become an almost annual vagrant since 2005; Manomet banded its fourth this year, and others seen in Newbury and Eastham remained for several days. A Northern Wheatear took up residence at Wachusett Reservoir in Clinton for six days, and a Green-tailed Towhee paid a brief visit to Hatfield on October 27. Rounding out this exciting period were a Western Tanager on Plum Island, and four Summer Tanagers, eight reports of Blue Grosbeaks, two Bohemian Waxwings, and a Yellow-headed Blackbird.
